

Nurses PUSH • Penn Non-Cis • QPOC present

Trans* Communities of Color and their Access to Health Services: A Spiraling Effect

Monday, March 23rd 2015

4:00pm-5:30pm

John Morgan Class of '62 Auditorium

3620 Hamilton Walk

The Affordable Care Act has eliminated major barriers to access to health services for the LGBTQ community, yet there is still much to be done. Trans* people and people of color both continue to report highest uninsured rates in the LGBTQ community. But what happens when those two identities intersect?

Join us for a panel discussion on the factors that determine trans* communities of color's access to health services as we look at access to health services from three different perspectives: healthcare policy, social policy, and day-to-day clinical practice. By taking an interdisciplinary approach, we aim to better understand the current state of trans* health, and identify barriers that trans individuals of color face when accessing health service.

PANELISTS:

Kellan Baker

Senior Fellow

Center for American Progress

Sebastian Velasquez

Policy Analyst

Latina Institute of

Reproductive Rights

Katrina Robinson

Benefits Specialist

Philadelphia FIGHT

